

“Aggregated into co-operative relation, intelligent, educated labor possesses the capacity for the accomplishment of any undertaking or enterprise, and need not wait for an individual called an employer to associate its effort, and direct and control the industry out of which it earns wages and pays a premium to capital.”

– Leland Stanford

“Co-operation of Labor,” New York Tribune, May 4, 1887